STEVEN ARNOLD, USA 1972, 74 MIN

Dalí considered Luminous Procuress 'a work of genius'. Featuring members of San Francisco performance troupe The Cockettes, the film was directed by the artist and filmmaker Steven Arnold, a muse and model of Dalí's. Dalí always referred to Arnold as his 'prince', and allegedly co-produced (or at least partly funded) the film]. The Village Voice called the film 'a tour de force of the imagination – a journey through peekboxes of naked tableaux, theatres of mechanical dreams, feasts of monsters and piles of humanity.'
